EBENSBURG, PA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1868.

November.

The chill November wind is sighing Across the meadows bare ; And clouds of marky spray are flying Through all the dreary air ;

And leaves of many-colored hues Descend with noiseless tread, Or rustle with a wierd-like sound On the branches overhead.

How silent is the woodland now No note of song is heard From robin, wren, or linnet gay, Or joyous mocking bird ; But the cheery voice of chanticleer, Like some lone clarion shrill, Rings through the dull monotony, Afar o'er field and hill.

Across the barren stubble-field The lowing cattle stalk, Or move among the forest trees, O'er many an ancient walk; The ploughman from his weary toil Lifts oft his anxious eye, And marks again the gathering clouds That sweep along the sky.

But darkness closes in the scene, The hour is cold and gray, The ploughman leaves the fallow ground And homeward plods his way; And at the rosy milkmaid's call The eager cattle come,

And man and beast the comforts feel, The blessings of a home. -Teachers' Advocate.
